As an undergraduate student, you can leverage your language skills through a variety of research grants that include non-English language components, such as translation, interviewing, or archival work in other countries.

APPLY FOR A FELLOWSHIP

Participate in multiple research, internships or academic-focused opportunities both nationally and internationally for which speaking another language can be a fundamental skill.

BECOME AN EDUCATOR

Speaking more than one language makes you more competitive in the global job market and opens up opportunities internationally, demonstrating valuable skills like adaptability and cultural awareness.

BOOST YOUR JOB PROSPECTS

Pair your degree with teacher licensure so you can share languages, cultures, and global opportunities with young people.

CONNECT WITH ALUMNI

The Austin J. Waldron Student-Alumni Connections Program helps undergraduate students connect with alumni for career exploration and planning via panels, industry-specific conversations, professional development workshops, on-site treks to Chicago businesses, and more.
